

About your Trinity examiner

MS MAGGIE LASZLO

Maggie has studied at the university of Southampton and Reading. Her first experience of teaching EFL was in London for the inner London Education Authority. She has wide and varied experience of teaching both adults and children in many different parts of the world.

In the early eighties Maggie took up a post with the British Council in the Netherlands. Here she first took on the role of examiner and teacher trainer alongside duties as a teacher. In 1985 she became a founding partner in a private language school. The school's success was built on a strong corporate client list but it offered a wide range of programmes including summer intensives for children and teacher training courses.

During the period spent in the Netherlands, Maggie also began to publish widely in educational and promotional journals and magazines. The materials she produced were used for teaching purposes in state schools.

Maggie is now a self-employed language consultant and writer. She is based in a village near Bath in Wiltshire, but work commitments mean that she will still travel extensively.
